

FLEXIBLE WORK ARRANGEMENTS - PRINCIPLES

The Northern Territory Public Sector (NTPS) provides a range of leave and flexible work options to assist employees in managing their work and personal responsibilities.

- Flexible work arrangements are not automatic entitlements however managers are encouraged to work with employees to consider such arrangements to benefit employees' needs, taking into account operational needs of the work unit, including the impact on all staff.
- Flexible work arrangements should include appropriate review mechanisms to ensure that arrangements continue to suit both parties.
- Regardless of what flexible work arrangement is in place, it is still a requirement that employees may be called for duty any time, or requested to work reasonable additional hours if required.

FLEXIBLE WORK OPTIONS

The following table lists a range of options for flexible work arrangements and leave entitlements. Arrangements will be subject to approval and CEOs or delegates are required to provide reasons in writing to the employee, where a request is not approved. In certain circumstances refusal for flexible work requests e.g. returning from parental leave, can only be refused on reasonable business grounds (refer to Cl. 48.4).

Agreement clause numbers referenced in this Information Sheet relate to the NTPS 2013-2017 Enterprise Agreement, as this agreement covers the majority of NTPS employees. However, as leave and flexible work arrangements can vary for different occupational groups, the information provided must be read in conjunction with the relevant enterprise agreement
