Overview

Australians typically don't reflect on their personal or professional journey until something goes wrong. Rather than wait for the wheels to wobble or fall off you are invited to attend this thought provoking and practical workshop designed to give you greater insight into your professional passage to this point.

It was noted business writer and thinker Peter Drucker who said that 'understanding self is the new frontier'. A critical element to navigate the frontier is to reflect on what you have undertaken so far and importantly to consider the lessons learned.

This can be done through a range of tools and processes however finding the time and space to do this effectively is a challenge. This one day workshop will give you the opportunity, techniques as well as the professional support to do this.
