Overview

This public policy development course provides a two-day introduction to the role of government as a policy-maker. The course places emphasis on the difference between administrative policy and public policy. It examines the role of the public servant in effective policy development.

This course builds on the foundational learnings from the Foundations of Public Sector Governance (formerly MoG) workshop and provides you with an opportunity to examine a cyclical model of policy development, together with best practice approaches to policy formulation.

Who should attend this course?

If you would like to build your understanding of how effective policy is developed, this course aims to help participants better understand the policy agenda of their agency and of government more broadly.

Learning Outcomes
